CERTAINLY PICKED AN OPPORTUNE

How well do Missouri's legislators know intimately the content of the hundreds of bills they are called to vote upon during a session of the General Assembly?

In 1955 there were 943 bills introduced, some running dozens of pages in length. For legislators and others to read, understand, and take considered intelligent action on them is next to impossible. Under present procedures the only way to learn how such legislation proposes to change existing law is by the time-consuming process of checking each word against existing statutes. We don't believe each legislator can accomplish such a task. And the layman who tries to follow the course of bills introduced is simply overwhelmed trying to find out what changes are being made.

So there seems to be some merit in a suggested plan of the Missouri Public Expenditure Survey to save time for legislators and interested citizens by enabling them to see at a glance how proposed legislation would change existing law.

This involves changing printing procedures relating to legislative bills so that new matter added to existing law would be printed in italic type, and old matter dropped from existing law would be enclosed in black-faced brackets.

We would like to see the present Legislature consider getting their bills out from behind the brush so everybody can see at a glance what they propose

The suggestion of the Missouri Public Expenditures survey is not altogether new. The problem has been recognized by other states. The plan suggested has been used successfully, sometimes with slight variations, in such states as Maryland, Michigan, Wisconsin, Idaho, Utah, New Mexico and others.

Missouri ought to get up front with this sensible plan to make what they're doing intelligible to the public, thereby stimulating more public interest in legislative procedures.

Could that be so objectionable?

By DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON-"We put the teamsters right here so we could keep an eye on Congress," quoth roly-poly, baldheaded Dave Beck, czar of the Teamsters Union, explaining why he had located his national headquarters so that any senator looking out a rear capitol window could not escape the modernistic glass-and-aluminum palace dedicated to the biggest union in America.

Beck's remark was made two years ago. He would not make it today. For today Congress has reversed things and is keeping an eye on One by one a long file of Teamster chiefs sat before the Senate Investigating Committee, blithely pleaded the Fifth Amendment. With questions.

Dave Beck didn't plead the Fifth Amendment. From his home in Seattle he pleaded sickness.

Sitting in his swank office at the foot of the Capitol a few weeks before, he could push a button and have the curtain automatically drawn over his huge glass window. Or he could push another button and diffuse the sun's rays in the window glass through which he viewed Congress. Another button turned on his special hi-fi set.

The push of another button turned on his specially installed TV set.

A battery of phones was spread out on the huge, bare desk. He could bark into a box and summon union chiefs from any place in his glass palace. Upstairs was a cafeteria where Teamster chiefs could eat free. Nearby was a gold-leaf decorated projection room seating 500, where the Teamster boss could show his private movies. The leather upholstery in his building made the Union League Club look parsimonious.

"We're going to keep an eye on Congress," the Teamsters boss had said. But now Congress is keeping an eye on him.

No Tears for Beck Not many people in the labor movement feel sorry for Dave Beck or the Teamsters. Dave has thumbed his nose at too many other labor leaders, crossed swords too frequently with George Meany, raided too many other unions, even loaned money to firms engaged in locking out other unions.

Furthermore, there's a lot in the record of both Beck and his No. 2 Teamster boss, Jim Hoffa, that ought to be investigated for the good of union honesty.

However, let's take a look at the man who's COLUMBIA MISSOURIAN: Firearms In The House. This is the season when people are accidentally killed by firearms. Death by firearms ranks sixth in the number of accidental deaths each year. One-third of these are children under 14.

Many men collect guns as souvenirs, and some boys and guns seem to go together. A gun is a gun to a boy if it will shoot, whether a toy or real.

We all know of instances when a child killed or permanently injured a playmate when playing with a gun while the parents were out. Others shot themselves, or someone else while cleaning a gun, showing one to a friend, or mistaking a member of one's own family for a burglar.

Guns should never be left in the reach of children. If there is a gun in the house, it should be kept in a place that is locked. Better still-if possible, do not let a child know there is a gun in the house.

A gun should never be put away loaded. Never clean one or handle it at any time without first checking to see if it is loaded. If a gun is left where someone might find it, be sure to fix it so it will not shoot.

There are two ways to play it safe. Do not take for granted a gun is unloaded-prove it. Never point a gun at another person, even if it's empty. Too many times what some people thought were empty guns were not.

If you have a gun in the house, being careful may save a life, your own, someone in your family or of a friend.

The plan is so simple one wonders why it hasn't been put into effect long ago. Under present procedures after a bill has gone through three printings and is "truly agreed to and finally passed" by the General Assembly, it challenges not only the legal fraternity, newspaper editors, but also legislators themselves how to explain to home folk what the changed bill means. Sometimes there is real complication when substitutes replace original bills, when amendments are adopted and when there are substitutes for substitute bills.

This scourge of humanity seemed in the way of being conquered largely as the result of the discovery of penicillin. For example, there was a decrease in primary and secondary syphilis from over 107,000 cases in the United States in 1947, to under 7,000 in 1955. The infectious form of the disease decreased during the same period from about 219,000 to some 29,000.

But alarming reports are beginning to come in. From July 1, 1955, to March 31, 1956, more cases of primary and secondary syphilis were reported in the United States than in the corresponding period of the preceding year. In Massachusetts, for example, which has been considered to have a low prevalence of syphilis, there was a 59 per cent increase in the disease (primary and secondary varieties) from July 1955 to March 1956, as compared with the previous year.

Efficiency experts are known to have performed stellar service in development of American industry and business during the past fifty years.

Our first encounter with one occurred 35 years ago. He was a whiz in business but his ability didn't extend into the field of public relatons.

When an efficiency expert gets into the wrong pasture he's likely to find more bull than he can effectively cope with.

We can't imagine one of them trying to tell Abe Rosenthal how to improve his conducting of the Sedalia Symphony orchestra, which by the way, has a concert coming up in Smith-Cotton High School auditorium Monday night, Jan. 28. But an illustration of how one of these experts might function and give Abe the wand-waving jitters is recounted in an article in Musical America Magazine: "An efficiency expert specializing in method engineering was taken to a symphony concert and asked to write a review. He wrote: "For considerable periods the four oboe players had nothing to do. The number should be reduced and work spread more evenly over the whole of the concert, thus eliminating peaks of activity.

"All of the 12 violins were playing identical notes. This seems unnecessary duplication. The staff of this section should be drastically cut. If larger volume of sound is electronic apparatus.

Says More Charges To Be Placed Against Teamsters' Official

WASHINGTON UP - Chairman McClellan (D-Ark) said today more citations charging contempt of Congress will follow that which his Senate Investigations subcomd mittee voted against Frank W. Brewster of Seattle.

Brewster is an international vice president of the teamsters union and president of the 11-state Western Conference of teamsters.

Brewster, called as a witness at a public hearing Saturday, refused to answer questions and contended the subcommittee had no authority to question him. The subcommittee was looking into alleged racketeering in labor unions.
